I am happy to announce the release of my second book in my trilogy series, An Ordinary Life: The Secret Butterfly Trail. Troubled by my past and seeking a new life, I suddenly found myself homeless and meandering through the heart of the Midwest. From New Mexico, I traveled to Michigan to live with my son and his family. With nothing but a bike and a backpack, I made my way following the trails of southwestern Michigan. Two thousand miles away, my ex-husband's suicide drove me into the winter of my deep despair. Reconsidering the choices I had made in my life, I did what was for me, the unthinkable. I traveled back to my hometown in New England which I had left 21 years earlier. On a quest to find a final resting spot for my ex-husband's ashes, I found more. In death, he led me back home to face what I had run from in the first place – myself. This is a story of death and rebirth, of despair and hope, the journey of a my lifetime.

I was born in New England in the middle of the 1960s and spent 20 years in the desert of the American Southwest. Finding inspiration in the red rocks of Sedona, my journey into journaling began over thirteen years ago. During a period of soul-searching, my life story began to unfold through daily writings. I am also the author of God Knocked Me Off My Bike, the first in the trilogy. I enjoy a simple life of hiking, yoga, gardening, and belly dancing. My mosaic-artist husband and I reside in Sedona.
